

Group 12 Changes

There are some slight design differences between our lo-fi and hi-fi prototypes: creating such a complex graphical interface was a new challenge for us given the limited time to refine and polish it. Our final product is not as aesthetic as the lo-fi specified but we preserved the features which made it user-friendly. We have set the location and temperature units at the moment, which is justified as our main stakeholders are Cambridge students who use Celsius as their primary temperature unit, but have kept these functions available in the Settings interface so that the functionality could be implemented at a later date. In place of swiping left and right, we have used buttons due to the lack of touch interfaces on most laptops and time constraints.